N. Korea Denies It Attacked U.S. Plane 'Above High Seas'

TOKYO - North Korea said in a carefully worded statement Friday that it did not launch a missile attack on a U.S. SR-71 recomnais-sance plane "above high seas" Wednesday, as suggested by a Pentagon announcement. But the statement by the official Korean Central News Agency, monitored in Tokyo, left open the possibility that an attack was indeed launched in what Pyongyang considers North Korean airspace. North Korea said that the SR-71 violated "the territorial air of the northern half of our republic," meaning North Korea, as "part of the maneuvers to aggravate ten-sion and start a new war in Ko-rea"

Haig Jr. said Friday that the United States will take "necessary measures" to pro-tect its military aircraft on legiti-mate missions from attacks by Li-byan and North Korean forces, United Press International reported. At a news conference, Mr. Haig called the Korean incident another in a long history of provo-cations against U.S. forces. [U.S. Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger also said Friday that the United States would take measures to meet what he called any new acts of international pira-cy by North Korea or Libya, Renters reported from Washing-ton. The latter reference was to ton. The latter reference was to last week's doglight in which two Libyan jets were downed after fir-ing on two U.S. aircraft in the Mediterranean.

He said it would be inap-propriate to specify what measures he had in mind, "but it's quite clear you can't have this kind of international piracy continuing."

'There's Nobody Else'

[Mr. Weinberger rejected North Korea's accusation that the United States sought to provoke a new Korean war. "It's pretty hard to provoke a new war when some-body shoots something that ex-plodes above your airplane. And there's nobody else in the vicinity, that is to say within hundreds of Washington Post Service MOSCOW — A 54-year-old Soviet engineer and his mother drove their passenger car into the U.S. Embassy compound in Moscow on Friday despite ball hours later, holding a news conference on a busy Moscow boulevard without any obvious po-lice harassment.

Unorthodox Step

If the man, Vasily Nazarov, and his 74-year-old mother, Natalia, are not harassed in the coming days, this will be the first instance of U.S. and Soviet officials finding an acceptable solution to dealing with the increasingly frequent problem of Russians seeking refuge in the U.S. Embassy. Seven Russian Pentacostalist Christians have been living in the embassy compound since 1978, when they forced their way in seeking asylum.

Mr. Nazarov, who gave reporters his telephone number in nearby Solnechnogorsk so that they could check on his whereabouts, said be and his mother took the highly unorthodox step in an ef-fort to publicize their grievances. He said that he was being persecuted by the anthonities, that he had been fired from a number of jobs and that his wife and a man who stood up for Mr. Nazarov's rights were beaten by security agents. Mr. Nazarov said that he had complained to Soviet authorines and had written direct appeals to the Supreme Soviet, but that his complaints were ignored. U.S. officials said Mr. Nazarov and his mother did not say that they wanted to stay in the embas-sy or seek political asylum. The incident brought security forces and jour-nalists to the building on Tchaikovsky Street. Af-ter agreement was reached to withdraw Soviet security forces except for the normal gnard always stationed in front of the embassy, Mr. Nazarov and his mother left the mission, walking a quarter of a mile while journalists asked them questions. It was not possible to determine Friday night whether the pair had been picked up for questioning by the police.

Washington Post Service WARSAW — Poland's Communist authorines agreed Friday to hold talks on Saturday with Solidarity over the union's demands for greater access to the officially controlled news media.

The talks, which will center on television coverage of Solidarity's na-tional congress next week, had been postponed after the government's chief spokesman said he was too busy for a meeting on Friday. But both sides are now apparently eager for a compromise. News that the talks would resume coincided with the temporary lifting of a critica theorem.

JOHANNESBURG - A South African strike force was pulling out of Angola Friday after inflicting heavy losses on black national-ist guerrillas of the South-West Af-rica People's Organization, the chief of Pretoria's defense force

Describing Angolan estimates of the size of the South African strike as "langhable," he said that no tanks were employed and that the forces involved in the "limited, fol-low-up and pre-emptive task" were not a fraction of the 45,000 men-tioned by the Amplant

It said these were threatening to wreck a peaceful so-lution of the 35-year-old interna-tional dispute over the vast, miner-al-rich territory. al-rich territory.

Suspicions on UN

Talks on implementing a UNbacked, Western plan for an internationally recognized accord on independence for the territory broke down in Geneva in January. The collapse was caused by bian suspicions about UN impartiality in supervising elections among the population of 1 million, which is split into 11 ethnic groups

Of these, there are about 110,000 whites, while nearly half the population are Ovambos from the northern strip along the 1,000-mile border with Angola where most of the fighting takes place.

In Windhock, the Namibian capital, the South African adminiscapital, the South Airican adminis-trator-general, Danie Hough, handed over almost all executive authority to the internal ministeri-al council headed by Dirk Mudge, leader of the ruling, multiracial National Turnhalle Alliance.

SWAPO has been waging a guerrilla war for 15 years against South Africa's rule over the disputed former German colony of South-West Africa.

The territory was turned over to South Africa by Germany after World War I and administered as a mandate under the League of Nations which passed it on to the United Nations. South Africa was originally given until May, 1975, by the United Nations to declare its intentions for the future of Namibia.

The announcement of the completion of the latest of a series of South African drives into Angola occurred as the UN Security - Council prepared for a public desate in New York on Angolan complaints of aggression.

Gen. Viljoen said that the securty forces, whose losses were given " is only eight dead, had repulsed an ittack by Angolan government-roops who had been warned to tay out of the fight.

PLO Is Said to Deploy Artillery But Begin Plans No Action If Guns Stay Silent

By David K. Shipler New York Times Service

JERUSALEM --- Prime Minister Menachem Begin has con-tended that Palestinian forces had deployed 18 Soviet-made artillery pieces in Lebanon since the cease-fire took effect July 24, but he said Israel would take no action against the batteries so long as they remain silent. A day after his meeting with President Anwar Sadat in Egypt, Mr. Begin said in an interview that since the cease-fire the Lebanese have rebuilt bridges that bad been destroyed by Israeli planes, and the Palestine Liberation Organization has moved new weapons and ammunition south sending Mr. Habib back to the region to pursue his effort to have Syria remove anti-aircraft missiles from eastern Lebanon. Israel has threatened to destroy the missiles if they are not withdrawn. Mr. Begin also discussed his sessions with President Sadat, which lasted three hours over two days, saying they had been most significant for their agreement to resume negotiations on autonomy for Palestinian Arabs living under Israeli occupation in the West Bank and the Gaza tion last year reaffirming its of-ten-stated claim to all of Jerusalem as its capital, including the Arab sector captured from Jordan during the 1967 War.

"If you have a difference of opinion," Mr. Begin said, "and admittedly we have a difference of opinion, and you negotiate, you may not reach an agree-ment. But if you don't negotiate, it is an objective impossibility to reach an agreement. It means do nothing. And that wasn't good at all.' The Egyptian-Israeli differences center on Mr. Begin's narrow definition of autonomy and his efforts to restrict the Palestinians' self-rule to municipal and administrative matters, while Mr. Sadat advocates broader powers - something the Israelis fear could evolve into an independent state. Mr. Begin reiterated his long-standing pledge to prevent the estab-lishment of such a state, which he said would develop into a Soviet hase.

But at the same time, his chief autonomy negotiator, Interior Minister Yosef Burg, said on Israel radio that the autonomy plan would provide the Pales-tinians with "more than 80 percent of statebood," and that they should therefore seize the opportunity and join the talks.

They did not: only small increases in the current aid of $83 million a year are contemplated. Their decision to rebuff the aid request says a good deal about Japan today, not only in its relations with South Korea but in its foreign policy as a wbole.

Historian Says Eisenhower Distrusted Eden Over Suez

The Associated Press

LONDON - During the Suez crisis of November, 1956, when Britain and France attacked Egypt, President Dwight D. Eisenbower so distrusted Prime Minister Sir An-thony Eden that be deali only with British Cabinet members behind his back, a historian says in a new book.

David Carlton writes in "Anthony Eden: A Biography," published Thursday by Allen Lane, that Eisenhower and U.S. Secretary of State John Foster Dulles were bitterly opposed to the action against Egypt, by which the Britisb prime minister hoped to bring down President Gamal Abdel Nasser, who had nationalized the Suez Canal from its Britisb-French owners.

Eisenhower distrusted Eden because he believed the prime minister had deceived him about British intentions and had denied any collusion with Israel, writes Mr. Carlton, a senior lecturer in history at North London Polytechnic, who says he drew the story from U.S. archives.

He says that Eisenhower ignored Eden and his foreign secretary, Selwyn Lloyd, and worked secretly to repair the U.S.-British alliance, using Winthrop Aldrich, U.S. amhassador in London, as intermediary.

Recorded Account

The Cabinet contacts were listed as Harold Macmillan, Lord Salisbury and R.A. Butler, now Lord Butler.

The three ministers were named by Mr. Aldrich in his recorded account of the period, deposited in the Dulles collection at Princeton University in New Jersey, Mr. Carlton writes

As quoted in the book, Mr. Aldrich said: "For the period between the attack on Egypt to the time Edea retired and Macmil-lan became prime minister, I would say that all important diplomatic exchanges in London between the United States and Great Britain took place between myself and those three members of the Cabinet Eden soon reached a point where he was incapable of assuming responsibility and it was perfectly obvious that he'd have to be supersed-

The Suez crisis finished Eden. He had succeeded Sir Winston Churchill in 1955 and resigned in January, 1957, in the roins of the Suez affair and after suffering a breakdown.

Mr. Macmillan then took over and Eden retired to obscurity. He was created Earl of Avon in 1961 and died in 1977.

Military Spending in Doubt

TOKYO (UPI) -- Japan may not grant the 7.5-percent increase in military outlays requested by its defense agency, the finance minis-ter said Friday.

Michio Watanabe told foreign correspondents that the agency's request Thursday for a 2,580-bil-lion yen ($11.2 billion) budget for the fiscal year starting next April was a 7.5-percent increase of this year's spending "but the 7.5 per-cent is the ceiling."

"This does not actually mean that the budget that will be appro-priated for the defense agency will be 7.5 percent," he said.

gency's budget increase from the 9.7 percent requested to 7.6 percent, bringing protests from the Carter administration.

Reagan administration officials have not mentioned how much of an increase they would like to see, but they are known to be urging Japan to spend more on defense and are considered unlikely to be satisfied with even a 7.5-percent increase.

Japan spends less than 1 percent of its gross national product on defense, compared to 5.5 percent for the United States and about 3 percent for NATO nations.

"This is all very painfull," said the German general. Meanwhile, Chancellor Helmut

2 U.S. Diplomats Go to Pakistan To Discuss Arms Aid, Afghanistan

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan - As Nikolai P. Firyubin, a Soviet deputy foreign minister, ended a twoday visit here Thursday and flew to New Delhi, two U.S. missions were arriving for talks on economic aid and the fighting in Afghani-

At the same time, the Pakistani government denied news accounts that it had rejected an Afghan proposal for peace talks and there was a report that Prime Minister Indira Gandhi of India had declined a Soviet invitation to visit Moscow.

What has brought urgency to the movement is a scheduled de-bate in the U.S. Congress next month on ways to augment de-liveries of advanced weapons to Pakistan. In addition, the issue of Soviet military intervention in Afghanistan is on the agenda of the coming session of the UN General Assembly,

As Mr. Firyubin left, a state-ment said his talks with Foreign Ministry officials had centered on Soviet-Pakistani relations, General Assembly agenda and the international situation. Pakistani officials had little to say on the tone of the talks, but they were eager not to appear confrontational.

'Mutual Trust'

"We in Pakistan attach the greatest importance to our rela-tions with the Soviet Union," said a government spokesman. "We desire to build our ties on the basis of al trust." He added that reports of the rejection of an Afghan peace initiative were "misleading and tendentious.

The Afghan initiative, timed to coincide with the Soviet official's visit here, waived prior objections to Pakistani insistence that any talks must include Iran. Having denied reports of rejecting the package, Pakistan's official posi-tion is that it is awaiting a text to study the proposal.

There are essentially two packages. The first, involving $3.2 billion of military sales credits and economic assistance, requires modification of the so-called Glenn amendment, which bars such aid land" in the United States, Peking to countries unwilling to give credible assurances that they are not trying to obtain nuclear arms. To bypass this roadblock, the Reagan administration is pressing for congressional action to bring the amendment in line with the Symington amendment, which permits such sales if the president declares them to be in the national nieresi.

Debate on the administration proposal is to begin next month in the House Foreign Affairs Com-mittee, and Pakistan is watching closely and pushing for passage. the ultimate arms package. The second package at issue is direct cash sales of military equipment. Cash sales are not linked to the issue of potential nuclear arming, but, in view of the money involved, perhaps $750 million, they can be blocked if both houses of Congress vote to do so within 30

Berets' Role In Libya Is Denied

The Associated Press NEW YORK - Edwin P. Wilson, a former CIA agent who was sol, a tonnet CFA agent, who was indicted last year on charges of illegally exporting explosives to Li-bya, has characterized as "an abso-late lie" allegations that the Green Berets he recruited were used to train terrorists in that country. The New York Times, citing information from U.S. government investigators, reported recently that Mr. Wilson had set up the terrorist operation in a deal closed in 1976 with the Libyan leader, Col.

Moamer Qadhafi. Mr. Wilson, in an interview broadcast Thursday with ABC News in Tripoli, Libya, said he recruited Green Berets but that they were used to teach "low-level" army tactics. Four former Green dollars in cash and valuables from the sunken Andrea Doria off Nantucket Island have brought to the surface one of the two safes they were hunting.

The salvage team does not plan to open the safe, however, until it broadcasts a documentary it is producing that is to examine why the Italian ocean liner sank. It had been reputed to be virtually unsinkable, even in a severe accident, but 11 hours after a collision with the Swedish ocean liner Stockholm on July 25, 1956, the Andrea Doria foundered in 225 feet of water about 45 miles (72 kilometers) off Nanincket, with the loss of 51 lives.

"We have the safe up here on board covered, soaking in a tank of salt water to preserve it," Kenneth Wilkerson, captain of the support ship Sea Level 11, said Friday in a radio-telephone interview. He said that the safe, which had been used by the Bank of Rome branch office on the ship, was "in pretty good shape." The expedition is being led by Peter Gimbel, a filumnaker and department store heir. Capt. Wilkerson said that the expedition leaders would open the safe on live felevision after the documenta-ry is broadcast. "We don't know what's inside, and we really don't care that much," he said. "The basic project is the film."

The Bank of Rome safe, measuring about 3 feet by 5 feet by 2 feet, was found Wednesday on the foyer deck. Divers were still seeking the purser's safe, believed to be on the same deck. The two safes are believed to contain between $1 million and $4 million in Experts have differed on whether the Gimbel expedition would be allowed to keep what is found aboard the Andrea Doria.

of military forces. The Times had reported that the involvement of Green Berets in Liby an training operations began on July 21, 1977, when Luke F. Thompson, then a Special Forces master sergeant, was recruited by a man who identified himself as Patry Loomis.

Sgt. Thompson, who was to recruit several other Green Berets, said he had thought at first that they were to infiltrate Libya and that the project had been approved by the CIA.

Mr. Wilson responded in the television interview to Sgt. Thompson'a statements. "I would have to say to his face he's a loudmouth, a. liar and we are well rid of him," Mr. Wilson said. "First of all. I don't think this country [Libya] is training any terrorists, let alone the Green Berets training them."

He said that a Swiss company; which he declined to identify, hired the Green Berets "on behalf of the Libyan government to do low-level training of their - ah --military people ... squad instruction on fire mancuver ... just advising at a very basic level."

The CIA revealed in Washing-ton on Wednesday that two agents who had been fired in 1977 for "lack of professionalism and judgment" had been dismissed for aiding Mr. Wilson in his dealings with the Libyans. The CIA spokesman, Dale Peterson, did not name the two agents, but other law enforcement sources identified them as Patry Loomis and William enburger.

Police in Spain Quell Riot in Madrid Prison

MADRID - Armed police quelled a riot by about 300 detainees in Madrid's main jail on Friday, prison officials said. The detainees barricaded themselves in a wing for young criminals, set a workshop ablaze, burned mattresses and broke windows. One warder was injured.

Police cordoned off the prison and officials said they feared the not might be a cover for a mass escape. On Thursday, officials said they had discovered a 20-meter (65-foot) tunnel in the prison and that this led to the transfer of 104 alleged Basque separatist guerrillas to a prison in southern Spain.

Malaysian Island Adjusts To Influx of 'Boat People'

By Henry Kamm island off the coast of eastern Malaysia became a symbol of the magnitude of the problem and the depth of the refugees' misery. Pulau Bidong is a barren island, no more than a steep hill plunging into the sea except on the side fac ing the mainland, which afforded a narrow strip of barren land on which people could put up ramshackle shelters of branches, packing cases and plastic sheeting. By mid-1979, more than 40,000 refugees were crowded together in pov-erty here — and giving thanks that they had reached safety.

The Malaysian government's ca-pacity to handle the refugees was outstripped by the onrush of peo-ple, who were mainly ethnic Chinese. And in this conservative Malay region, in which there had been a delicate racial balance be-tween Malays and ethnic Chinese, the government was hard put to protect the refugees from local bostility.

Malaysia was also deeply worried that the flow would never stop and that the United States and other nations would be unwilling to take in so many refugees.

Medicine Scarce

The refugees lived without toilets, with few wells - and those yielding water unfit to drink and with their food supply dependent on deliveries by boats that would sometimes not brave the choppy seas. There were more than 80 refugee doctors at one time, but medicine and equipment was

The refugees felt neglected and cut off, even from mail. Their numbers continued to mount, and few left for new homes. Their leaders and refugee officials feared that the intensely crowded and unsanitary conditions, combined with a low state of nutrition, exposed them to a grave risk of epi-

In July, 1979, the turning point came. News coverage of the huge exodus, which was provoked by Vietnam's expulsion of its Chinese minority, increased international pressure both against the Hanoi government and on Western governments to raise their refugee quotas. That month, President Jimmy Carter doubled the Ameri-can quota to 168,000 Indochinese a year, and a UN-sponsored inter-national conference extracted an implicit Vietnese assurance the implicit Vietnamese assurance that the outflow would stop.

Today, Pulau Bidong shelters fewer than 9,000 refugees, or about half the monthly arrival rate in the first half of 1979. The meticulous New York Times Service chart kept by the refugees shows PULAU BIDONG, Malaysia — that 87,767 people have found shelter since the camp was opened in 1978, and all but those now here have been resettled, about twothirds in the United States.

Not only has Pulau Bidong's population dramatically decreased, but Malaysia has also been able to close the other refugee camps that once dotted the east coast. All refugees are now concentrated here. When this camp housed more than 40,000, more than 30,000 other refugees crowded camps north and south of here.

The total refugee population in Malaysia today is about 13,000. The other refugees are in a transit camp in Kuala Lumpur, the capital, awaiting transportation to their new countries.

Despite the spareness of the living conditions, the refugees still on island are in good spirits because the rapid rate of resettlement is limiting the average stay to a few months

Officials of the UN High Commissioner of Refugees, working with the Malaysian Red Crescent Society, have improved living con-ditions from abysmal to primitive. Rudimentary houses have been constructed, toilets built and water supplies and drainage improved. The decline in the population has relieved the worst of the problems.

Speedy boats now take an hour cross hetween the island and Kuala Trengganu, the provincial capital on the mainland.

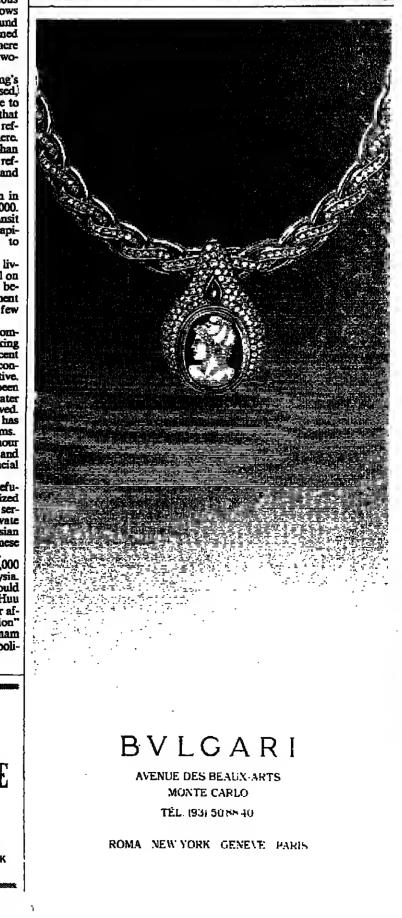

Given this assistance, the refugees themselves have organized schools and a variety of social ser-vices. There is a flourishing private market supplied by Malaysian traders as well as Vietnamese bakers, cooks and seamstresse

So far this year, about 18,000 refugees have reached Malaysia. Asked when the outflow would stop, the camp leader, Hoang Huu Pho, who was released last year af ter five years in a "re-education" camp, replied, "When Vietnam changes its government and poli-CV.

Equal-Time in Poland

Solidarity, which began life as an incipient trade union a year ago in a Gdansk shipyard, has turned into a broadly based and powerful force for social and political change. Its struggles are no longer the basic hattles of workers for higher wages and bener working conditions. Solidarity is fighting for control of the workplace, with all that implies for control of the economy: it is fighting for democratization of the political process at the local and national levels, and it is fighting for the abolition of censorship and the end of government control of the media.

With Solidarity's first national congress scheduled to hegin Sept. 5, it is the last item that has come into sharpest focus. The union, which we continue to call it for lack of a better description, seems determined to prevent the government media from distorting Solidarity's accomplishments and aspirations. To do that, Solidarity is demanding editorial control of newspaper, radio and television coverage of the congress.

In other national contexts that would seem a high-handed request — rather like the Democratic Party, or the AFL-C10, demanding the right to decide what may and may not be published about their deliberations. Imagine the bue and cry in the United States should such an unlikely event occur. But Poland is not the United States. Things have changed, hut not so much that Solidarity is wrong to fear that the government-controlled press would give it something less than a fair shake.

Nevertheless. Solidarity is treading on dangerous ground. It is telling the Polish people, trust us, we will tell you the whole truth about ourselves. That is a lot to ask, even for an organization that has earned as much respect and good will from the people as Solidarity has. The union, after all, has factions. There will be disagreements about how to proceed in key areas such as worker self-management. There are bound to be clashes over the proper relationship between the union and the government. Like any political body. Solidarity will want to keep some of this to itself. In fact, a Solidarity official said the leadership would oppose live television coverage of the congress. The gov-ernment media, on the other hand, would be delighted to report it.

There is an alternative that is better than letting Solidarity be the sole arbiter of what is and what is not printed or broadcast. Solidarity should provide its own coverage, to be distributed along with the government's coverage. It should ask for access to government printing and broadcasting facilities to present its version of the proceedings on an equal-time, equal-space basis. Then the Polish people will be able to decide for themselves what to believe. And Solidarity will not be vulnerable to charges of hiding the truth and muzzling the media. INTERNATIONAL HERALD TRIBUNE.

The Noose Loosens

For August, the weather is good and so is the news. To recognize how good, one need only think back two summers:

Jimmy Carter, shaken, came down from Camp David to lay out new energy policies. The public was angry and agitated about gasoline. People were getting up at 4 o'clock in the morning to wait in service station lines. Tempers exploded; one California driver in a gas line supposedly threatened a pregnant woman at gunpoint. And there were mutterings about larger violence. Some said America should consider the possibility of seizing Arab oilfields. We all were learning, in the most personal ways, how tight was the noose - how dependent the United States is on imported oil.

Already, those concerns seem nearly antique. Gasoline shortage? Today there is a worldwide oil glut. Cracks are opening in OPEC. Nigeria has just announced a $4-abarrel price reduction, the biggest ever by a member of the cartel, and no one would be very surprised if other producers soon offered similar cuts.

For all the rash talk then about military

Consumers in the United States, and worldwide, are using much less oil. In August, 1979, the United States was importing about 8.5 million barrels of oil a day, and that high again. Sure enough, this month, the figure is 5.2 million barrels. Not only is that a drop of 39 percent in two years; it means that this year, at current prices, the United States will have to send about $40 billion less to foreign producers.

There has been similar conservation around the world. In 1979, all the OPEC countries were exporting about 31 million barrels a day. Now they are exporting only a bit more than 21 million. With that much surplus capacity, the world can breathe a little easier about the potentially strangling effects of another crisis like the revolution in Iran.

This is not all unrelieved good news. The rapid drop in the U.S. demand for imported oil is partly attributable to the sluggish growth of the economy. Though the oil glut shion the disru we will remain vulnerable, in a geographical sense, as long as half of the world's petroleum comes from the Gulf.

VALLETTA, Malta — Mal-ta's feisty prime minister, Dominie Mintoff, has his own fight now with Libya's Col. Moamer Qadhafi, after years of mutually rewarding chummery. So he would like the United States to come to his aid.

But there is a price. It implies warning about the pitfalls for the United States in making arms handouts a key instru-ment of a foreign policy focused on global rivalry with the Russian

That would be all the more import-ant if Libya goes through with its unlikely threat of giving the Soviet base facilities. Soviet base facilities. So Malta has asked the Unit-

However, he argues that it's in the interest of the United States for Malta to refuse mili-

He says be wants arms from East and West, refusing any specifics about what kind of threat he thinks Malta faces. By careful allusion, he suggests without actually saying so that he'll turn to the East alone, however, if the West doesn't Italy, for reasons that are not obvious, has already signed a vague guarantee agreement with Malta which, however, provides for a quite precise grant of $80 million plus $15 million in soft loans over five years ending in 1983. Mr. Min-toff's point is that the United States should do something similar since Italy might not be a fully reliable protector.

The Health Records

Government health agencies now can, and do, keep detailed health records of millions of Americans. By means of computers and microfilm, information including cause of death, occupational exposures, diet, drug use, reproductive history and so forth, can be stored on a scale unthinkable until now. There are huge listings for cancer and occupational disease, and there is now a U.S. National Death Index. This mass of information can be a researcher's gold mine. But the existence of the files also poses ethical and legal questions that have not been resolved.

The particular advantage of such data is that it can pinpoint answers before anyone knows how to ask the right questions. Asbestos, for instance, was found to be the cause of disabling lung disease through the study of this kind of information, rather than through the study of the condition itself. As in this case, or in the case of most cancers, if the biological causes of a disease are unknown, or if there is a long latent period between exposure to the disease-causing agent and ap-pearance of the disease, such data hanks can be the only way to uncover the link between a disease and its cause.

These medical records are thus a powerful tool whose potential has only just begun to be tapped. But their existence may also impose ethical responsibilities beyond - and often in conflict with - those associated with medical research. If a particular chemical or type of behavior is found to be hazardous. must those whose names are in a file be informed? What if the connection is only tentative, or if there is nothing the individual can do about it except to worry? Is it doing anyone a favor to provide such information, especially when stress itself is known to be a powerful contributor to sickness? Is it ethical to provide notification without also providing medical follow-up? And if that is required, what if the costs of providing it are so great that it becomes impossible to collect the information in the first place? Then, clearly, everyone loses.

Deciding who should have access to the data raises a different set of questions. Government agencies collecting this kind of information have an unusual exemption from the Internal Revenue Service law that otherwise keeps taxpayers' records strictly private, but they do not have a corresponding exemption from the Freedom of Information Act. FOIA requests can easily invade personal privacy that medical researchers normally take great pains to protect. Premature release of data - by those with business or other interests to pursue - can cause public confusion, fear and economic losses.

In the wake of some notorious cases of government's irresponsibly declining to notify people of ailments inflicted on them and often inflicted by government action there is a tendency, which we share, to view such secret record keeping with suspicion. There is also something naturally repugnant in the government's knowing that an individual was exposed to a likely carcinogen and not telling him or doing anything else about it. But no one has yet figured out the proper guidelines for disclosure and notification where large-scale medical records are concerned. Maybe a limited-access, researchonly policy is the wisest course. Certainly this is one rare case where a government task force could do some good.

NEW YORK - The school authorities at Cleveland have planned a technical high school to prepare girls to become useful wives and care for a home. The instruction will be far more comprehensive than the cooking schools, and four years will he required to complete the course. The authorities disdain the ordinary cooking school, because the latter, they say, hardly fits a girl to become more than a servant. Their plan is to instruct the girls in every branch of household duties, including nursing babies and hushands. The authorities believe that the average Cleveland girl is nowadays sadly deficient in the practical knowledge of things that every future wife should know.

PARIS - Today's editorial in the Herald reads: "The civilized world has long blindly believed that open, undisguised slavery no longer exists. The truth is just the opposite. There is slavery in Africa and there is slavery in Asia. The present ruler of Abyssinia, Haile Selassie I, is apparently sincerely desirous of suppressing the husiness and has forbidden it. But domestic slavery is legally established in Abyssinia, although Ahyssinian bondsmen, who number 2 million - about one-fifth of the total population - can hold property and engage in profitable work on their own account. Haile Selassie declares himself in favor of manumission, but adds that to be properly effected it would consume time."

That's baloncy, as the com-mander of the Sixth Flect, Vice Adm. William H. Rowden, made clear. Noting that "we have conducted similar excercises in the same general area in the past," Adm. Rowden said the latest exercise was "in fact, the ninth one conducted there since July, 1977 ---the last one was held in September, 1980."

Now it is true that last September, according to two Carter men in a position to know (former Defense Secretary Harold Brown, and his deputy, Robert Komer), the Navy was put under wraps, with orders not to test the 200-mile limit claimed by Libya. "I thought it would be foolish to risk an incident with Qadhafi, with Iran and Iraq at war, the hostage crisis, and the Arab-Isracli ten-sions," Mr. Komer recalls. "We had enough going on." But Mr. Komer insists it was made clear that this was "a one-time proposition - the Libyans knew we were not waiving any rights or setting any precedent." By way of underscoring the point, says Mr. Brown, U.S. reconaissance planes at other times last year deliberately overflew the Gulf of Sidra waters claimed by Libya.

Finding the Money

Both Mr. Brown and Mr. Komer, incidentally, agree that the Reagan administration was right to reaffirm its own rejection of the Libyan territorial claim. But it is one thing to reassert a right, and quite another to transform a reflexive return of hostile fire under well-recognized "standard rules of engagement" into some grand res-toration of U.S. military might.

This is all the more the case when you consider what the presdeat was busy with just after be was flexing U.S. "muscle" on the deck of the carrier Constellation off the California coast.

How Brook Nurtured His 'Cherry Orchard'

by Mel Gussow

ARIS - In his 38 years as a director, Peter Brook has often altered our way of looking at theater. His production of "A Midsummer Night's Dream" banished the fairy dust encrusting the text and turned the play mito a bright, white acrobatic carnival. With "Marat-Sade," andience and ac-tors were confined in the insane asylum at Charenton for an evening of revolutionary the-ater. His production of "Timon of Athens" in Paris turned Timon into the equivalent of a modern political exile, southing crabike into the desert. Last year at LaMama, Brook took us on a mystical journey to ancient Persia in the epic "The Conference of the Birds."

Working with both his international experimental company and the Royal Shakespeare Company, staging plays from Persepolis to Broadway, Brook has remained unpredictable. The range of his work is perhaps unmatched by that of any other contemporary director. But for all his virtuosity, until recently he has neglected one major area of theater: naturalism. His striking version of "The Cherry Orc-hard," performed in French in Paris, rectified that oversight.

After playing four months to capacity andi-ences at the theater Les Bouffes du Nord, a somewhat derelict structure in a working-class district of Paris, "The Cherry Orchard" closed to make room for the director's next project, the opera "Carmen," but it has been taped for French television and may return to the stage next year. An English-language production is a possibility. Those who were fortunate enough to see Brook's first "Cherry Orchard" - an audience that included in its final week the new president of France, Francois Mitterrand - are unlikely to forget it.

It was different from any other "Cherry Orchard" that I have seen, beginning with the starkness and simplicity of the setting. In the center of the stage was a large carpet, and on it were placed several coshions and a few straight-backed chairs. Natasha Parry, playing the elegant Mme. Ranevskaya, returning to her country estate, swept on stage and grandly sat in one of those bard chairs. In the classic Brook sense, this was "a free carpet show,"

Chekhov stripped of ornamentation and affec-tation; there was not even a semblance of a tree in sight. The actors were thrown back on the words, as adapted by Jean-Claude Car-rière, and on their own resources.

In lieu of scenery, the costumes were elabo-rate; each summarized its character. The few remaining properties assumed even greater metaphonical significance — the bouquet of keys that Varya, Ranevskaya'a adopted daughter, wore at her waist became the badge of her off-ice as supervisor of the family estate. When she flung them at the estate's new owner, the out-sider, Lopakhin, it was as if she were challeng-ing him to a duel.

The production was a return to Chekhov's own vision. The evening was comic without being farcical, and it was immensely human and an authentic ensemble piece. Other productions have centered on the conflict between Ranevskaya and Lopakhin, treated as a repre-sentative of the aggressive working man on the move. Without overlooking Ranevskaya's commanding presence - even in this version, she was always surrounded by her entourage - Parry emphasized her charm, femininity and fragility. This was a glamorous woman who needed to be taken care of.

In his essay on Chekhov, Vladimir Nabokov describes the Chekhovian intellectual, but be could have been speaking about Parry's Ranewskaya as someone "who combined the deepest human decency of which man is capa-ble with an almost ridiculous inability to put his ideals and principles into action." Gracefully, Parry captured her character's helplessness and her generosity of spirit. Niels Arestrup's Lopakhin was not the boor-ish rustic we often find in productions of "The Cherry Orchard," but a man of considerable sensitivity. When Trofinnov tells him that he has the hands and the soul of an artist, the remark should not seem humorous or gratui-tons. Lopakhin has suppressed the hyrical side of himself, but the instinct is there. In Arestrup's portrayal, we saw a man lacking in table manners but not in taste or in sympathy. In-stead of wondering, as we sometimes do, why Varya wants to marry such an oat, we wondered why he wanted to marry her, a pale reflection of Ranevskaya, Ranevskaya's brother, Gazy, shooting billiard balls into imaginary side pockets, has been portrayed as a doddering old simpleton. In a performance of remarkable tenderness, Michel Piccoli restored him to his position as an aging innocent and scraphic wastrel, fritter-ing away his life and his sister's resources. He is simply unable to function in a real world; even if he had the money, he would never be able to buy the estate. When the estate is lost, he offers his sister immediate consolation, trying to soothe her because he knows that her heart is shattering.

Even the minor characters achieved an inner importance — the maid Dunyasha, fliring with the idea of freedom, and Yasha, the big-city servant with illusions of position, already boasting a cigar and a bowler hat. In the final act — the play was staged without intermission — the carpet was thrown back and the stage was emptied of its few accourtements. The house was ready for abandonment, and for formal old Firs, the most dignified member of the family. Exquisitely personified by Robert Murzean, he delivered his final lines not as the last words of a man about to he entombed, but almost in a whisper, a quiet verbalization of the offstage cry of the falling trees. As an era ends, Firs remains an afterthought. Paradoxically, this revival of a well-known classic became, in Brook's hands, one of the most original events of the theater season

Several days after seeing "The Cherry Orc-hard," I visited Brook in his Paris apartment. That apartment, which also serves as studio and rehearsal space, was almost as bare of furnishings as the stage at the Bouffes du Nord. In fact, his living room looked like the setting for his "Cherry Orchard."

We both sat on mattresses on the floor and took part in a free carpet conversation. He began: "The reason 'The Cherry Orchard' touches people in extraordinary ways is because, as in any great work, behind it is a myth. This is a poem about life and death and transition and change. Chekhov was writing it when he was dying. Knowing that he had a short time left, he felt a theme emerging: something loved has to be relinquished, disappointment has to be accepted. And he wrote it in a language that he forged for himself; it was not the language of Shakespeare or of Pushkin." Brook compared Brook with Jean-Claude Carriere, who adapted Chekhov's play.

Chekhov, in his distillation of words and imag-es, to such modernists as Beckett and Pinter. "While playing the specifics," he said, "we also try to play the myth — the secret play." One of his first problems was the choice of cast, whether to use the ensemble-trained performers in his international company or the Shakespeare-trained members of the RSC. He decided to take a third course, to put together a new company, drawing from various sources, including actors he had worked with and those with experience on the French stage. "The very basis of the international group is that anyone can play anything. Blacks play whites and young play old. But there are degrees of ohligation, correspondence and physique in Che-khov, Every actor has a different background and story, hut they have several things in comon: a degree of aptness physically and a level of competence with Chekhov. They are experienced professionals who have not lost their innocence, their knowledge of what first brought them into the theater. But I could not advertise: open call for innocent actors." Largely he had to go on instinct and recommendations. Two people came from his international company, his wife, Natasha Party, who is equally adept at playing classics, and Maurice Bénichou, who also acted as assistant director. Some actors declined his offer because they felt a lack of identification with the material; there is no great French tradition of playing Chekhov. Others declined because they felt the roles were too small.

However, Piccoli, a major international film star, was one who was not at all disturbed at playing what might be considered a subordi-nate character. From the beginning, the director was clear that the roles were equal. "The audience has no way of telling who has the biggest part. It's like a family on Christmas day. After the day is over, one can ask, who spoke most and who spoke least?" One of the spoke most and who spoke least? One of the most difficult roles to cast was that of Firs. They could not find any aged French actor with experience of playing Chekhov. Finally, Brook's assistant asked, "Where is Robert Murzean?" For years, Murzeau had been a popular stage actor in comedy roles. He was found living in retirement in the country. When he was asked to play Firs, he said gratefully, "The reason I went into the theater was to play Shakespeare and other elassics. I've wanted to do Chekhov for nearly 60 years."

Rehearsals began in Brook's apartment with a lavish Russian dinner, prepared with the advice of the director's mother-in-law, who is Russian. It was a chance for the disparate ac-tors to meet and to begin their immersion in Chekhov.

Rehearsals continued for 10 weeks. "For everyone to share the totality of the material, we would do improvisations, have discussions of the play and read Chekhov stories. They would argue and attack one another. Gradually the cast assumed the play. To do a naturalistic play you have to respect the specificness of the period, place and social conditions, the de-mands of scenie language, which is like photo-graphs of everyday life. But this is not a behavioral study. Meyerhold called it a symphony, a dance." Brook approached it as a "theatrical movement purely played." "From the start, I wanted to avoid sentimentality, a false Che-khovian manner that is not in the text. This is not gloomy, romantic, long and slow. It's a comic play about real life." In Duesseldorf, a Young Museum Director Works Hard to Paint the Nazi Past Black

Irwin Shaw Celebrates by Calla Corper LOSTERS, Switzerland - Irwin Shaw hadn't slept well the night be-Koenig resolved to ferret out Düsseldorf Between 1933 and 1936 Levin was alternate-"resistance art." Slowly, thoroughly, assidu-ly imprisoned and doing forced labor, such as sculptures (sometimes only a photograph is exworking in a cemetery. He then taught art in the Jewish school in Düsseldorf and later in Berlin; Koenig has uncovered some of these children's paintings and plans to show them in a future exhibition.

by Helen Lion

UESSELDORF - This is a city of impressive art galleries and expensive restaurants, of clegant women and a shopping district to match. It is also the town of Dr. Wieland Koenig, a young German with a long memory.

His good looks, easy-going air and hearty laugh are deceptive. The man is anything but a bon vivant. Koenig is striving to realize a selfimposed mission: to remind his fellow Germans of their past and to guard against future horrors.

But rather than hunt down the perpetrators of the Nazi regime, he has set out to immortalize the artistic idiom of the Düsseldorf citizens who opposed it.

It all began some months ago when a group of influential Düsseldorf rightists proposed Arno Breker, official sculptor to Adolf Hitler, as the person to construct a long-overdue memorial to Heinrich Heine, the city's most re-nowned son. For many West Germans, the 19th-century poet and revolutionary is a symbol of resistance to bigotry. "If Breker scalpts a Heine memorial, then I have nothing more to do here," Koenig told the city leaders, threatening to resign from his position as director of the Stadtmuseum, Düsseldorf's historical art museum.

Breker did not get the assignment. The af-fair brought Koenig a wave of personal harasament, including threatening letters and mid-night telephone calls — but he also got municipal backing.

As a sign of appreciation for his stand, the city fathers presented him with a terracotta group statue that has since been on prominent display in his muscum.

ously, he is assembling a series of exhibitions he calls "Resistance Rather Than Conformity in Düsseldorf." Many of the works were burned by the Nazis, many of their creators were banished, tortured and killed.

Koenig has become a kind of art detective. So far, the names of some 15 resistance artists have emerged, including Ludwigs, Kralik, Barz, Levin, Pankok, Brueck, Lanterbach. The strong message of the art works so far uncovered is reinforced by a high aesthetic caliber thanks to Koenig's meticulous standards. (He studied classical architecture and art history in Münster, Munich and London, has worked in museums in New York and Düsseldorf and is an active member of ICOM, the International Council of Museums.)

Recent events have strengthened Koenig's resolve to pursue his mission. "The protracted Maidanck trial in Düsseldorf that recently meted out less-than-satisfactory justice to Nazi criminals demonstrates once again the impo-tence of the Federal Republic in dealing with the most terrible chapter in our history," he says. "In the Stadimuseum safe we have pre-served a piece of soap made in Maidanek of the human fat of victims murdered there. This kind of object cannot easily be exhibited

So he goes in quest of these murdered men and women's artistic legacy.

Opening on Sept. 2, in honor of what would have been his 80th birthday, is an exhibition of the extant works of Julo Levin, a Jewish artist active in Düsseldorf from 1919 to 1933, when the Nazis forbade him to work and to exhibit. Levin was a leading member of the "Young Rhineland" and the "Rhineland Secession" movements."

Traces of Julo Levin, the man, disappeared in a deportation transport to Auschwitz in May, 1943. Efforts were made to save his art - with partial success. A friend, Micke Monjau, the wife of an artist later killed by the Nazis, began secretly and systematically packing Levin's favorite canvases for shipment to safety. At the same time, Monjau hid a number of his paintings with fishermen on the Baltic. These are the only paintings left since the case with the packed canvases was destroyed by fire shortly before the war's end.

"Job," a large oil of a broken man scratching the carth with his fingernails, was painted by Levin (described by those who knew him as a great optimist and believer in humanity) in 1933-4. This was a little while after he was released from prison and heard from an artist friend how he and others had been mistreated in the city's torture cellars. The painting has been called "a self-portrait of a bitter future."

Levin was the fourth artist to be shown in the muscum's series of resistance artists. The third was Carl Lauterbach, whose oils, chalks, charcoal and pen and ink drawings were on show last spring. One of his 1944 charcoal drawings is an important document. Titled "Concentration Camp Prisoners During Cleaning Detail After a Bomb Attack on Fingerstreet in Düsseldorf," it gives the lie to those who say they never knew about such things.

tant), the energetic director is looking for manuscripts, books, music compositions - everything that represents artistically expressed defiance to the Nazis. Given West Germany's rightist reawakening, especially among universi-ty students, reminders of this kind, Koenig feels, are vital. He hopes eventually to huild a special museum annex to house all the materi-

What moves the 42-year-old Koenig to indulge in an activity that cannot be described as popular? Many of Düsseldorf's other citizens want to forget the Nazi past and some insist that such a time never really existed.

He has three reasons. First, a personal one: He remembers the panic of an aunt who was married to a Jew — both were saved at the last moment, although the husband's family was exterminated in concentration camps. Second, "as a young German, I want to see to it that we do not forget the gruesome past. And third, as director of a historical museum, I see it as my duty to present convincing graphic evidence of this past."

Masses of official Nazi art are stored away in the Stadtmuseum. Koenig says he hopes to show the works one day alongside the resistance art and original texts. But he cannot show it, he stresses, "as loog as a museum serves only as a temple of the muses. We must first make our museums into learning places." This, he feels, can be done through films, lectures and discussions, by presenting pictures and texts "in a balanced way" and, most important, involving the public actively. Koenig has also brought his zeal to bear on the city's architecture. Many of the garages still standing in Düsseldorf were torture cellars in the Third Reich, he says. "I don't want the old-timers to forget nor the new generation to be ignorant."

At his insistence the municipality is affixing signs on each of these former torture chambers. And when a proposal was made in the city council to have local artists paint frescoes over former air raid shelters, Koenig cast a de-cided veto. "We can't have our history be painted over with beautiful colors," he says. "Our past is black and must be remembered as such. No lovely landscapes on grim reminders."

"Julo Levin" is at the Düsseldorf Stadtmuseum from Sept. 2 to Oct. 4.

Dr. Wieland Koenig.

A phoned at midnight from New York to tell him that his latest novel, "Bread Upon the Waters," had just been chosen by the Book of the Month Club.

But that winter day Shaw still managed to work in the morning, tackle the ski slopes, stop for lunch with friends and talk for a few hours in the afternoon about himself. Shaw didn't say so, but he was celebrating his continuing success, the fact that he can still ski well after a hip operation and that, at age 68, he is still on top and going strong. There's a lot of an Irwin Shaw hero in Irwin Shaw, the macho, driven writer about macho, driven men.

"The critics say I should quit writing novels and stick to short stories," Shaw shouts from the kitchen as he looks for some apple juice. "I guess they think I'm getting too prolix. Even a friend asked me if I really had so much to say anymore. 'No,' I told him, 'it's pure egoism. Shaw lets out a sigh as he sits down with his apple juice. "I wouldn't know what to do anyway. I can't ski all day." Shaw's previous novel, "The Top of the Hill" was not a critical success, even though it sold well and a bad movie was made from it. Shaw won't be remembered for that book's hero, Michael - a young New Yorker driven by a suicidal urge to acrobatic skiing, parachuting and hang gliding — as he will be for his other Michael (and for that matter, Noah and Christian) in "The Young Lions," his first and immediately successful novel, written in 1948 and made into a very good movie.

Although Shaw never rereads his novels ("After you've spent a few years on a book, you've had it," says Shaw, who does admit to rereading his short stories,) he obviously reads reviews. And he can't have written as much as he has about the universal irony of human experience and remain immune to criticism. Nor s he going to stop writing while he's so far

The television series of "Rich Man, Poor Man" really pnt Shaw ahead. The series was not only a compulsive, engrossing weekly event around the world but also boosted sales of his other novels (which are printed in 20 languages) and inspired new printings of the short stories that he wrote for The New Yorker, Esquire and Playboy in the 1950s and 1960s. The series also led to a revival of some of his plays, much to his surprise, and got British television interested in making 90-minute shows based on some of his short stories.

Shaw won't say what he thinks is his best book nor did he want to discuss "Bread Upon the Waters," which has just appeared. Publishers Weekly says it is Shaw's finest novel since "Rich Man, Poor Man" and that it is "a story of what happens to a loving, self-reliant Amer-ican family when a powerful and wealthy man uses his influence on their behalf, and in the process changes their lives." In The New York Times Book Review, Shaw's new novel was praised as the work of "a thorough professional, a word used here with admiration and re-Spect.

spect." Shaw is willing to discuss his professional-ism. "As you get older, nothing is hlack and white anymore," he says. "I find it very hard to write a complete villain now. But my technique gets better.

It took Shaw three years to write "Bread Upon the Waters," his 11th novel, and he has already started the 12th. "I've got 600 pages of notes that I've been collecting for this book for the last 30 years," says Shaw, "and it will probably take me as long as it did the last." He works in the morning for four or five hours and then, in the winter, heads for the surrounding slopes. It was the writer Peter Viertel who introduced him to Klosters back in Shaw, now working on his 12th novel.

1956. Viertel was living there with his wife Deborah Kerr, and he told Shaw to come and learn how to ski. Shaw, who did some skiing in Vermont when he was a youngster, now starts to reminisce about the old wood bindings and leather straps and the bitterly cold New Eng-"Well, 1 came to see Peter and that was that," says Shaw, who had lived in Paris, Rome, the Basque country and a few other places when he decided to go back to Europe after World War 11. He took a chalet near the Viertels' and started to really appreciate the long, powdery runs for which Klosters is famous. "I was a very bad learner," Shaw says with a laugh. "The better athlete you are, the worse your habits for skiing. I played quarter-

He has a house in Southampton on Long Island, where he goes for the summer until August, when it gets too crowded" and a lot of "Bread Upon the Waters" was written there. He says that he does not find it difficult to write from a remote Swiss valley about Americans and nat-urally has put into his books some of the characters he has met in Klosters. "You know, livnetters no more net in a vice a lot of material. People tell me their problems, I know who's getting married, who's sleeping with whom. who's having hahies, who's getting divorced and who's dying." He says he always wanted to be a writer and was getting encouraging letters from The New Yorker at 17, even before his English teacher noticed his talent at Brooklyn College. "In 1934 1 was starving and would have taken any joh," he recalls. "Then a friend who was writing radio soap operas suggested that I could do that just as well as he. Suddenly I was writing three hourlong plays a week for the fat salary of $340. That's like $3,400 now!"

Shaw started to write plays and movie scripts and then was orafted in 1943. He saw action in Africa, Italy and France and was for a time a combat photographer. "You remember the scene in 'The Young Lions' when Brandt enters Paris and starts taking pictures?" he asks. "Well, that was me."

There is more of the author throughout the book: "The Japanese mowing the lawn outside Whitacre's room when the bomh drops on Pearl Harbor and Whitacre goes down and confronts him? That really happened. I was on the West Coast working for Hollywood."

Shaw switches to white wine as the sun sets behind the Alps. He becomes the rewarded storyteller he mentions in his preface to "God Was Here But He Left Early" - "filling the need of humanity ... escaoing from the laws of consistency." laughing and enjoying what he says has been "purely and simply luck."

Level Thinking on the Slant

by Alan Levy

LPBACH, Austria -- Alphach, in the Tirolean Alps some 35 miles from Innsbruck, is a town on the tilt. The barn is on stilts and cows graze almost vertically on steep slopes; nothing is straight, nothing is level, all is askew.

Even one's thinking becomes slightly vertiginous... What better setting for a think tank

By next Friday, when the 37th annual Alpbach European Forum ends a fortnight of study groups, symposia and lectures on "Strucstudy groups, symposia and lectures on "Struc-tures in Transformation" (including economic, biological, political, religious, musical, literary, environmental and even building structures) this tiny resort (population 2,200) will really have been abuzz. More than 1,000 participants from all over the world are chattering away in German, English, French and Italian, the four official languages of the European Forum. Scheduled speakers include the Figaro co-lumnist Patrick Wajsman (Saturday and Mon-day), Samuel Brittan of the Financial Times (Monday) and German industrial chief Otto (Monday) and German industrial chief Otto Wolff von Amerongen (also Monday) among many academics, ministers, commissioners and diplomats.

In 1936 Alphach was a remote mountain village of 1,700 farmers, but it proved big enough for the late writer Thomas Wolfe, a native of the Blue Ridge Mountains of North Carolina. On a grand tour of Europe, the 6-foot-6-inch novelist decided to tarry in the Tirol and asked a travel agency in Innsbruck if it knew a place with a bed big enough for his body. The travel agent sent him to Alphach's Böglerhof, then a farmhouse that took guests, today a 110-bed hotel ablaze with geraniums and petunias and blessed with a breakfast buffet that includes fresh-baked breads (linseed, oregano, anise and fennel whole-grain). Wolfe stayed two weeks with the Alfons Moser family in the primitive Böglerhof; climed the Gal-tenberg (altitude 7,953 feet), the highest moun-tain of the Kitzbühel range, and wrote home to his mother that the Alpbach Valley had "some of the most beautiful mountains and villages' he had ever seen.

Wolfe didn't stay long enough to put Alp-bach on the map and, even in 1945, when World War II ended, there were Tiroleans in innsbruck who had never heard of the place. But Otto Molden, a 27-year-old Viennese student of history and economics, knew of it because Simon Moser, a fellow partisan in the Austrian underground resistance to Hitler and a University of Innsbruck philosophy lecturer, had a brother, Alfons, who was the mayor. With the wisdom of wartime, Molden and Moser foresaw that the rebuilders of Europe would focus on material reconstruction, while the two of them wanted to establish a center of vigorous international intellectual activity in a contemplative setting sealed off from the "real world" and its pressures by "a cordon sanitaire of mountains." The answer to their vision was Alphach.

Thus, the first postwar cultural manifestation in Europe was in Alpbach that August of 1945, beginning 10 days after V-J Day: a 17-day forum on "Science and Our Age." And the first postwar tourists in Austria were a dozen Swiss scholars coming to Alphach and bearing provisions for all the participants; Mayor Moser had welcomed his brother's 80 guests on condition that they would bring the supplies, as Alpbach was hard-pressed then to feed itself. Using his wartime contacts, Otto Molden also invited intellectuals serving in the French, British and American occupation forces.

Though Alpbach's first formal intellectual discourse was punctuated by the squawks of chickens, which sometimes took the floor, the 80 participants convened daily in Mayor Moser's Böglerhof. But there were only 48 guest beds in all of Alpbach, so the 32 others had to commute the two miles to Inner Alp-bach on foot. The following year, Otto Molden and Simon Moser institutionalized their innovation as the Austrian College and today Mol-den, still president at 63, is known as "Mr. Alpbach" even though he is based in Vienna. A ranch-style Kongresshans was built in the 1950s and, over the years, such notables as Konrad Lorenz, W.H. Auden, Friedrich Dürrenmatt, Max Frisch, Moshe Dayan, Yit-zhak Rabin, Herbert Marcuse and Karl Popper have participated in Alphach European Forums. Another forum figure, Arthur Koestler, built a chalet here and stayed 15 winters and summers until Otto's younger brother, publisher Fritz Molden, bought his

In 1975, Alpbach was host to the Club of Rome conference on "Food for a Doubling World Population," an important meeting that also served to shine a spotlight on the town's good eating and drinking. In 1978, the Austrian College added an annual June event: a Dialogue Congress between Europe and overseas.

This year's Europe-U.S.A. dialogue featured exchanges with U.S. Deputy Secretary of State William P. Clark and Assistant Secretary Law-

Otto Molden and Simon Moser wanted to establish a center of vigorous international intellectual activity in a contemplative setting sealed off from the real world and its pressures by a cordon sanitaire of mountains.'

rence S. Eagleburger and Treasury official Timothy McNamar, all of whom kept assuring Alphach that the United States will not leave Europe in the lurch militarily or economically, while concerned European hands were wrung by OECD Secretary General J.E. van Lennep and EEC President Gaston Thorn, who has been coming to Alpbach since his student days. While the forums are financed by fees from the paying public ($350 to attend the forunght, Distance Distance Comparison of the second vithout room or board), the Dialogue Congresses, as assemblies of invited experts, are underwritten by the Austrian Government.

Though the Austrian College's events consume barely three weeks a year, the whole Alp-bach Valley is now a thriving year-round resort with more than 2,800 beds, more than 12 miles of downhill ski trails for all skill levels plus 8 miles of cross-country tracks; 17 ski lifts plus 100 miles of walking, hiking and climbing trails, of which half are cleared in winter.

Alphach is truly a resort that thought built. Such is the fallout of its intellectual fame that there is an Alphach alumni association (Inter-national Chub Alphach for European Culture) with 600 members.

No tourist town in this part of the Tirol is better preserved and maintained than Alp-bach. Much of the credit for this goes to the late Alfons Moser, who served nearly 35 years as mayor until his death in 1979 and whose daughter, Carin Duftner, still runs the Böglerhof and leases out the Kongresshans. Starting in 1953, Mayor Moser stopped all building that didn't conform to the Tirolean chalet style of wood exteniors with long carved balconies and low-pitched roofs adorned by little belfries and often weighted with stones.

The rest of the credit goes largely to other Mosers, for 380 of the town's citizens bear that name, including tourist director Koni Moser and excursion-bus mognl Gabriel Moser; 83 of the women are named Maria Moser and the Toni Moser taxi service is run by Toni's widow Maria. As Koni Moser's deputy, Friedrich Gasser, explained: "In 1924, the first road was built into Alpbach. Until then, all the Mosers had only each other."

7 Sacks, 7 Cats, 7 Wives, Why They're All Going to St. Ives

by Terry Gross

T. IVES, England — Although much of the attraction of Cornwall lies in its rugged landscape and charming villages, a visitor next month could list music, art and theater as additional excuses 10 stop at St. Ives, near the end of the Penwith peninsula.

Cornwall (UK) 1 to

The St. Ives September Festival may not be as well-known as the festival in Edinburgh, but by virtue of its newness, it is more accessible. Its scale is more human, its events closer to the audience, its directors more likely to be seen scurrying up Back Road West to the Penwith Gallery with a last-minute bit of instruction for exhibitor or performer. The festival here began in 1978 as a combined effort of local business-

whatever they choose to do by Williamson's former colleague, Clive-Palmer, and pianist-composer Douglas Cook

Events all three Saturdays (Sept. 5, 12 and 19) will be held outdoors, with a revival of St. Ives Carnival Day on Sept. 5 and, in the evening, a catnival dance in the Guildhall featuring the Tropic Isles Steel Band. On Sept. 12, Harbor Day will be held, with a regatta, a raft race called the men and the renowned International Musicians Seminars in nearby Prossia Cove. Since then, it has relaxed its style somewhat, but it retains its founding spirit — an eclectic mixture of events aimed at a variety of audiences and encompassing almost all of the town's public buildings, animences and encompassing annost at of the town's public buildings, beaches, fields, galleries and streets. The jumping-off point of the 1981 festival is a commemoration of the centenary of the birth of Borlase Smart, the painter who, with Barbara Hepworth, Ben Nicolson and others, was a key figure in the emergence of St. Ives as the focus as a British artists' colony in the 1950s and 1960s. Smart is honored next month with a major exhibition of his work in the Barbith College, and with the first performance of a new ork in the Penwith Gallery and with the first performance of a new piece called "Seascape," written by Christopher Brown at the request of Smart's son Brian. The new piece will be performed Sept. 17 at the Guildhall at 8 p.m. and will feature Wendy Eathorne, soprano, John Barrow, baritone, the Brio Brass Ensemble and the Penzance Orpheus and Marazion Apollo choirs.

Actually, the festival opens with a weekend country fair at Splattenridden Field, Aug. 29-31. It will be an extravaganza of Celtic games and performances, displays of vintage cars and engines, games and entertainment

Back in St. Ives, the festival will continue on Sept. 4 with a rare pairing of Robin Williamson, late of the Incredible String Band, and Liverpool beat poet Brian Patten. They will be aided and abetted in

The final Saturday will conclude with the annual festival ball, this year with music by The Temperance Seven and Mounts Bay Syncopators.

For folk music lovers, there will be live Celtic pipe bands from Brittany, Dave Swarbrick (former fiddler of Fairport Convention) with Robert Hunter, ex- of the Grateful Dead, and Earl Okin, as well as local artists in pubs and clubs around town.

Theater will be presented by the acclaimed Shiva Theater, giving per-formances of Joc Orton's "What the Butler Saw" and James Saunders" Bodics." On the streets, at unscheduled but regular intervals, will be Prompt Copy, a street theater group that has grown out of the Natural Theater Co. of Bath, which has been delighting audiences at St. Ives for a couple of years.

For classical music enthusiasts, the Hungarian violinist Sandor Vegh will lead some of his friends from Prussia Cove in performances of Mozart, Mendelssohn and others in several of Penwith's churches.

With events going from 10 a.m. until midnight or so every day, there is no lack of planned entertainment at St. Ives. In addition, there is the unscheduled, and always appealing natural wonder of Cornwall itself, from the legendary birthplace of Arthur — Tintagel — in the north, to St. Michael's Mount in the south.

Schooling Opera Singers by Ear

by Jean Rafferty

RAZ, Austria - From Kansas junior champion hog caller at 15, to stage director at New York's Metropolitan Opera, Henry Butler has depended on his "impeccable car" to produce the right sounds. Now he is in Graz with the Dallas-based American Institute of Musical Studissues a summer program for young operatic art-iss. Butler is putting the technique that channed not only those Midwestern pigs, but also Met greats such as Leontyne Price, Joan Sutherland, Richard Tucker and Jon Vickers, to the task of helping young opera singers find themselves as original performers. Music students are suffed like Strasbourg grees," he says, "They need time to digest the music they've performed. Ninety percent of what they've been taught in the conservatory is external. The only thing that is going to make one an artist is the brain."

Butler starts his courses by emphasizing, "the voice not attached to the brain is just a noise. The only special thing you have to offer as an artist is you." He explains. "It's hardly an original idea, but you'd be amazed how difficult it is to make them understand. My first

Butler was frustrated in his own musical career when a childhood case of polio temporarily paralyzed his right arm and forced him to abandon the violin. He more or less backed into opera as an assistant to Gian-Carlo Menotti in the 1950s, then went on to direct the Santa Fé opera productions of "Madame Butterfly" and "The Ballad of Baby Doe" in 1958. He became guest director at the Metro-politan in the 1960s, creating new productions of "La Somnambula," "Queen of Spades" and "Girl of the Golden West" at the Met.

He is perhaps best known for his libretto of "Mourning Becomes Electra," based on the Eugene O'Neill play, which had its premiere at the Met in 1967, with music by Marvin David Levy. Since then he has directed at opera hous-es in Europe and America, lectured on opera and directed the "Miss America" pageant.

Many students come prepared to learn exactly how such great opera stars as Callas and Pavarotti sang their most successful roles. Which is exactly what Butler will not give them. "This is not Henry Butler's four cute tricks for Tosca, six cute tricks for Madame Butterfly and nine cute tricks for Aida.

"I'm trying to teach them to be self-creative, so that when they meet a director or a conduc-tor they will possess an individual dramatic and musical point of view. Otherwise, you are pushed and shoved by those who say this is what Wagner is, or what Mozart should sound like.'

His method calls for a basic psychological change for students who have spent years tak-ing their music teacher's word as law. "There's a crucial moment in life when one has got to stop taking it on faith. This is where I come in. I'm trying to help them discover how they can do it themselves - the only role to individual expression.

"Why else would we go and hear six sopra-nos sing the same opera? Because if it works, we've seen six different women."

Though Butler warns that there are no shortcuts and that finding and developing a per-forming personality is a laborious job, he com-Callas' or a Pavarotti's a information job, ne conn-Callas' or a Pavarotti's — to getting from New York to Boston via New Orleans. "Why waste all that time imitating other people? And audi-ences have an uncanny instinct. They smell platitudes and clichés."

Opera is notoriously prone to histrionics. "I ersuade them that to act is to do, not to feel. All this mumbo-jumbo that surrounds being an actor is cloudy nonsense. Act is a dirty word. It leads to a reckless hysteria that destroys voices, while if one keeps doing the logi-cal thing, it is fascinating to watch."

Opera presents quite different dramatic problems to those of the theater. "An aria takes a long time to say very little. The singer must act with his voice. An actor could not possibly get away with so little movement." Which is why theatrical direction often goes amiss in opera. "The singer shouldn't rush about the stage," says Butler. "If you find a singer static, it is because his brain is static, not because he's standing still. He must act through his face, hands and voice."

When it works, even the andience may not realize how it is done. Butler gives the example of Leontyne Price singing a Verdi aria while doing a slow figure eight. "The next day the critics wrote that she'd paced the stage like a restless tigress."

To make it in opera, says Butler, it helps to have been born poor, or raised on a farm, "The most exciting singers were never taught to be well-bred." But one needn't have a great voice. Citing the success of Grace Moore and Mary Garden, whose voices were not spectacular, he says, "What makes careers is not talent, but det mination. It ignores that there's no voice, or that the body can't dance. That temperament is what made Maria Callas soar across opera, and become a household word."

Austria was chosen by the American Insti-tute's directors, Richard and Nora Owens, to familiarize the American students with interfamiliarize the American students with inter-national opera agents and the peculiarities of working abroad. In West Germany, operatic roles are rigidly classified according to voice types in a system and no singer can be asked to sing a role outside his "Fach" or specialty. The French way of working, too, can come as a surprise to Americans. "On my first day at the Paris Opera only the cleaning lady showed as a surprise to Americans. On my inst day at the Paris Opera only the cleaning lady showed up on time," recalls Butler. "But after I made each latecomer apologize to the company, they all came on time. It's a different attitude. The French like to think of their performers as diffident amateurs — as though they've been surprised in the act of performing." When he is done here, Butler will go to the University of Michigan as guest director and opera "gura."

Latin American Painters: Making It in Paris

by Esther Garcia

ARIS - Antonio Segui is a middleaged Argentine painter whom New York art critic John Russell describes as "a remarkable artist, not like anyone else." He works in a studio in the tumbledown and romantic garden of one of the last grand turn-of-the-century houses in the working-class Paris suburb of Arcueil.

The paintings stacked along the walls are dark oils of tense men in business suits and fedoras, who look warily at each other and hungrily at the women who pass by. The women are mostly naked and there are a few birds with human faces.

Segui lives in Paris because, he says, "I have lived in Paris since 1963 and all the art I need in see is available here." A series of engravings featuring the hard-bitten men in fedoras will be shown, starting late next month, at the Salon des Arts in Brussels, the Leinster Gallery in London and the Brickman Gallery in Amsterdam.

Across the garden is the studio of the Uruguayan artist Jose Gamarra. He is working on one of his sinister toys: a papier-mache striped worm, "Imperialism at the Ready." His naive paintings show battles between indigenous people and their exploiters in huge landscapes and carry their political message cheerfully. "I have been searching for — and think 1 have now found — the exact tone 1 want, so that 1 can tell stories about reality without looking like a pamphleteer," he says. These painters are part of the Latin Ameri-can colony of artists who live and work in Paris. They number, at a conservative guess, about 400. The attraction of Paris for these artists is based on a myth, hot a myth that is reinforced by tradition and success

"For us, the truth was always in French," says one of the Colombian emigrés. In Latin America, Paris was often called the Capital of America and was the place where people who wanted to learn about art had in come. The first came to learn from the Cuhists. The best known of these early visitors is Emilio Pettoruti, who became a friend of Braque and Juan Gris and returned to Argentina to start his own school.

After World War II, the Chilean Roberto Matta, who is considered the greatest figure in contemporary Latin American painting, and the Cuban painter Wilfredo Lam, who also had a large following, inspired many young painters to come here. They keep coming to-day because of the myth, because France is politically apure and here were here they are politically neutral and because here they can test themselves against an established, international art community. The crisis that is plaguing the world art market does not exist for most Latin American artists. For the last 10 years a new market has developed for them. The search for a national identity in Latin American countries has fueled a growing demand for the work of na-tive artists. Governments, large companies and LORENCE - Florence was Paul Klee's favorite city in Italy, if not the world. The Comune di Firenze makes the point this summer in an exhibitioo of more than 200 works by the Surrealist painter that date from 1900 to 1940, the year of his death. They were chosen for their diversity from the collection of the artist's son, Felîx.

Those mornings in the Uffizi were forma-tive. Botticelli's "Spring" was very different from his schoolbooks. So was Raphael, in particular a peo sketch of a woman that he thought to be closer to the style of Perugino, Raphael's first master. Klee's ideas of art were ppily bent, twisted and reforged into the graphs, where he is seen with Kandinsky and Walter Gropius.

The first works of the exhibition focus on the human figure, full and uncomplicated, and herald his remarkable linearity and his love of music, mainly interior. His art was the visu: proof of this: lines, lines and more lines.

The exhibition, to Sept. 13, is housed in Orsanmichele, ooe of the architectural moouments of Florence. Originally a granary, it was rehuilt in the 14th century as the church of the various guilds that flourished oo the wool trade, the economic foundation of the Renaissance. (A pair of scissors and other stone symbols set in the hrick cross vaults testify to this.) Fittingly, the exhibit continues up to the second Orsanmichele loft, which opens out onto Florence and the lordly hills of Tuscany, young Klee's first inspiratioo.

A Harvest of Summer Shows in London

ONDON - An unusual feature of the past 10 summers has been a major - - show at Annely Juda Fine Art of abstract, or more strictly speaking, non-objective art. This year, under the title "Con-figuration 1910-1940" (Annely Juda Fine Art, 11 Tottenham Mews, W1, to Sept. 26) figurative and non-figurative works are hung alongside one another, the figurative chosen for their abstract qualities of form and color, the non-figurative for their close relationship to the visible and "real" world. Since both groups are of equally high quality, the juntapositions create a most stimulating environment. Magritte's "Le Palais de Rideaux" with its shostly manikins is echoed by Robert Delan-nay's "Esquisse Decoration;" Max Ernst's "La Femme" echoes Ella Bergmann-Michel's "Mit drei weissen Pfeilen." Among the abstractionists are Vantongerloo and Rodchenko, El Lis-sitzky, Kliun and John Gorin; among the figu-ratives Leger, Delaunay and Juan Gris. Artists working in both disciplines include Mondrian, Schwitters, Klee and Kandinsky.

Fernand Leger, a major influence in French and American art, is comparatively little-known in England. At the Riverside Studios, Crisp Road, Hammersmith, W6, to Sept. 6 is an excellent small show of his work, "Fernand Leger 1881-1955." This is comprised of the re-cent Centre Pompidou exhibition "The Poetry of the Object" and a loan show of paintings, gouaches and drawings from British collections. The Paris contribution emphasizes Leger's preoccupation in the early 1930s with everyday objects — a pair of old gloves, a pen-cil sharpener, a rose, a holly leaf, a handkerchief --- treated in a manner halfway between classicism and intense super-realism. The British contribution ranges more generally over Leger's work, and includes ballet designs, near-abstract watercolors, figurative oil paintings such as that of a "Young Woman Holding a Flower," borrowed from the Fitzwilliam Muscum, and a tapestry.

Working with Léger and Lhote in Paris in the 1930s, and exhibiting with them in French shows by invitation of French artists' juries, were the English painters Bassett and Muriel Wilson, who signed their work in Paris only with their forenames. They are two of the four artists, all of whom in style, taste and characterization belong to the Ecole de Paris, collectors buy, almost exclusively, the work of dio in the Latin Quarter, with several cats, artists from their own countries. now, their thoughts are often about their real homes. On a recent trip outside Paris for the opening of Gamarra's show at the Centre Cul-turel Municipal Jacques-Prévert in Villeparisis, the carful of people included a critic, a Con-ceptualist, a humanist and an unclassified artist. The car turned off the highway, passing suddenly between some brillianly green, ahrupt, small hills. The talk about art stopped. "We could be in Venezuela," said someooe, "or in the Sabana of Bogota." Suddenly every-one was as one, remembering real country.

Diamonds Lose Their Glitter

by Souren Melikian

ARIS - There is some anxious speculation in auctioneering circles as to whether diamonds can climb back to the all-time high that was reached in February 1980. In view of the increasingly arge percentage in the yearly turnover that ewelry has been accounting for in recent rears, this speculation is hardly surprising.

At Sotheby's, jewelry represented one-sev mth of last season's net sales. The total of £46 nillion was exceeded only by the £59 million ealized by Impressionist and contemporary saintings and sculpture. At Christie's, jewelry ales totaled £32.4 million, more than one-ixth of the season's total. Out of this, dianonds and diamond jeweby get a major share - about half of it at Sotheby's sales, according o Nicholas Rayner, Sotheby's jewelry expert and director in charge of the Geneva office. A iccade ago, the amount of diamonds offered it anction was very limited, and virtually none ame from professional sources.

Christic's were the first to make a breakbrough in the diamond market. Using their williant success with the sale of Nina Dyer's liamonds in May 1969 as a springboard, they turned Geneva into a diamond anction strong old. The reputation that Hans Nadelhoffer, lirector of the jewehy department, acquired or himself as a diamond specialist was an esential factor. New York came next in line and his time the key man was Francois Curiel, the on of a Paris dealer in antique alver and ewels, who became senior vice president of Inistie's, New York last June. Between Octo-ber 1976, when he arrived in New York as a soung trainee of Nadelhoffer's in Geneva, to fune 1981, yearly sales of jewelry jumped from S million to $22 million.

hamond pendant, soon at Christie's.

Sotheby's success in Switzerland - original-ly in Zurich, now in St. Moritz and Geneva likewise owes a lot to one man. Nicholas Rayner started out in life as a military pilot in the British air force, which he left some years later when the element of challenge had gone with the last remnants of the British Empire. The next stage for him was an atchier in Rome where he designed costume jewelry. Eventually he decided that he needed some training.

He studied jewelry at an apprentice school n Rome, went from there to the Sir John Cass School of Arts where he learned enameling. mounting and engraving, and finally had a working spell on the designing side at Chau-met's on the place Vendome, Paris. By the time he joined Sotheby's, in 1974, Rayner had as sharp an eye as a pilot-cum-jeweler can have. He also proved to be a brilliant anctioneer, targeting would-be buyers and timing his shots, or rather his calls and hammer-wickding. with unparalleled efficiency. It culminated last November in Geneva as be knocked down the most expensive lot of jewelry ever — a pair of 120-carat diamond earnings sold for 12.4 mil-lion Swiss francs ($7.3 million). This was only a few days before Nadelhoffer had auctioned the 41.285-carat Polar Star diamond for 8.6 million Swiss francs, i.e. at a world-record $112,000 per carat.

Expressed in these terms, everything would seem to be for the best in the best of diamond worlds. Unfortunately, personal achievement aside, other factors helped boost the market and these are now working against it. Fundamentally, the main element behind the diamond auction boom of the mid-1970s was worldwide inflation buoin of the har 1905 erated in the general public to invest in tangi-hics. In the carly stages of the inflation it be-came fashionable to buy art until financiers discovered that this requires a professional understanding of the problem.

Eventually it dawned on them that, unlike shares, oo two works of art are alike -- that each must be authenticated and then assessed in terms of relative art-historical and aesthetic significance before it can be estimated. That, in turn, is an art in itself.

It was all very difficult. Diamonds, many thought, were the easy alternative. Dealers encouraged this view. Auction houses got them to consign ever-increasing amounts of gems for sale and the market started booming precisely at the time when the art market was on the rocks. According to Rayner, another littleknown factor further encouraged the boom. Financial institutions in Israel came into the market in a big way in 1978 and bought more heavily still in 1979, as Israeh inflation acceleratod. Several large Israeli banks were then financing cutting houses. Suddenly, the market stalled in March 1980. From January 1979 to February 1980, the price of flawless five-carat diamonds had jumped from $20,000 to $62,000 per carat ac-cording to Curiel and Rayner. By May, diamonds were having serious problems and

Christic's had a hard time with their Geneva sale. In February 1981, the market was at a virtual standstill, activity being confined to small gems of 0.50 carats. Last May, the value of flawless diamonds could be estimated at about half the peak value of February 1980. although no gems of any consequence were put to the test at auction.

No convincing explanation has been put for-ward by professionals, but one springs to the mind of an art market observer. The basic rea-son behind the rise of demand from non-professionals was their firm belief that diamonds were safe because they were obvious in contrast to works of art. Alas, they are not. Buying a diamond can raise as many problems as buying a painting by a 17th-century Italian master or a Renaissance bronze.

Diamonds are not just diamonds. They are graded according to color, transparency and other factors. Curiel says that current prices per carat will fall by 30 per cent from D to E, and by 15 per cent from E to F to use the conventional grading of the Gemological Insti-tute of America, which has laboratories in New York and San Francisco. Many non-professionals know that by now and private buyers have increasingly been buying on the basis of certificates in the last few years.

What they do not know, however, is that grading differences between different institu-tions, and even between laboratories attached to the same institution, can be considerable.

Curiel cited to this writer the case of a blue diamond recently sold at auction with a certificate from a Swiss laboratory giving it a "fancy blue" natural color. The buyer was a professional. To resell it he was aware that be needed a certificate from the GIA, whose grading cer-tificates are almost always demanded by high-powered investors. The New York laboratory gave it a "fancy grayish-blue" grade. The downgrading meant a loss in value of muching of the mine a finanzial director two-thirds of the price - a financial disaster for the professional. He was fortunate enough to get the GIA to accept a new examinatio and resubmitted his diamond, this time to the Los Angeles laboratory, which delivered a "fancy light-blue" grading. That, Curiel comments, made it worth one-third less than it would have been had the European grading been upheld by the GIA, but did not kill it as the New York grading would have done. It must be stressed that in all three cases, the institutions concerned were not only acting in perfectly good faith - they all are highly regarded by professionals. Some others are

The parallel with buying an old master painting is perfect: certificates - from reliable sources - are needed, but the buyer must be able to make his own assessment. So delicate are the problems involved that according to Curiel "a certificate one year old is generally considered obsolete." In short, diamonds are no more foolproof than works of art. To buy them requires just as much professionalism and to acquire that takes just as much time.

Deere to Sell China Farm Machine Technology

PEKING - Deere & Co. has signed the first contract with China for the transfer of technology to make agricultural machinery, a spokesman for the U.S. company's Peking agents said Friday. The contract, signed Timrsday, involves the sale of a license and tech-nical know-how to build three models of combine harvesters. Deere will provide drawings, data on quality control and other aspects, train Chinese technicians and management, and send experts to give instructions. The Decre spokesman said the deal would enable the Chinese to prodace 1,000 to 5,000 modern. European-style combines a year. He said China was paying an undisclosed sum for the license and technology, and Deere was committed to buying back a number of Chinese-made parts, farm tools and possibly complete harvesters over a 10-year period.

Some British Caledonian Workers Forgo Raise

The Associated Press LONDON — About one-third of British Caledonian's 6,000 employees have volunteered not to take a scheduled 8-percent pay raise, the airline said Friday. The raise is due under an agreement linking pay to the government's retail price index. The move will save British Caledonian about £500,000 a year. Chairman Adam Thompson had hoped to save triple that sum, but even the limited employee response "means a great deal to our borrowing power," a spokesman said.

Nippon Steel, Armco Close 10-Year Pipe Deal

Reuters TOKYO — Nippon Steel has concluded a 10-year agreement to supply Armco Steel with 20,000 to 50,000 metric tons of seamless steel pipe a year, starting this year, Nippon announced Friday. Earlier this year, Armco bought about 7,000 metric tons of seamless pipe from Nippon on a spot basis, Nippon said.

West German Banks Plan Travel Check Group

BONN — West German commercial and savings banks plan to form a joint group to issue internationally recognized traveler's checks, a spokesman for the West German savings bank association said Friday. The move followed the failure Thursday of negotiations in Brussels between West German commercial banks and Midland Bank's Thomas Cook subsidiary on developing sales of Cook's traveler's checks in West Germany, the spokesman said. He said the new organization also intends to issue a travel and entertainment card, possibly in conjunction with American Express.

The spokesman said the Brussels talks failed because, without the participation of savings hanks, which withdrew from negotiations earlier this year and opted to sell American Express traveler's checks, the plan would have been too costly for the commercial banks.

Dow Chemical Buys Ethylene Cracker in Spain

MADRID — Dow Chemical's Spanish subsidiary has bought an ethy-lene cracker with a capacity of 350 million metric tons a year from state-owned Empresa Nacional del Petroleo (Enpetrol), a Dow spokesman said Friday.

Industry sources estimated the cost of the facility at 15 billion pesetas (about $151 million). They said that the cracker, one of two at Enpetrol's .Tarragona plant, will play a key role in the 40-billion-peseta expansion. of Dow's petrochemical complex there.

Time to Buy Half of USA Network Cable Firm New York Times Service

NEW YORK - Time Inc. has agreed to buy at least a 50-percent. interest in USA Network, the United States' third largest advertiser-supported cable television service. The development had been rumored for some weeks. Time already owns Home Box Office, the biggest of the U.S. pay cahle networks.

Time agreed Thursday to buy the half of USA Network that is owned by UA-Columbia Cablevision for $15 million in cash, UA-Columbia said. The other 50 percent, owned by Madison Square Garden Produc-tions, is expected to be acquired by Paramount, which would then form a Joint venture with Time to operate the network. Paramount, however, cautioned that it was still reviewing whether it U.S. Airlines Feeling Pinch from Strike would in fact buy the other share. It said it expects a final decision within a few weeks. If Paramount does not huy the balance, Time said

To Job Cuts

LONDON — BL, Britain's state-owned auto company, Friday post-ed a £190-million loss for the first six months of the year and said it and months of the year and said it cannot become profitable unless the work force is reduced further to around 100,000 employees. The company's chairman, Sir Michael Edwardes, said, however, that he saw no need to ask the gov-erament for additional funds in 1981.

Sir Michael told a news confer-ence on BL's interim 1981 results that the company — with just un-der 129,000 employees — was still overmanned in relation to the cur-rent and projected size of its Brit-ish and foreign markets.

The company's pretax loss for the first six months of the year compared with a loss of £138.1 million in the same period a year earlier. Sales remained about steady at £1.41 billion, compared with £1.42 billion in 1980's first half.

BL said it expects its full-year loss will be held to the 1980 level of £387 million and that trading losses and cash outflow should di-minish through 1982 as BL moves to its targeted break-even point by 1983-84

The first-half loss was after in-terest charges of £47.1 million, up from £44.7 million a year earlier, but before taxation of £2.5 million, bit before taxation of 22.5 million, compared with £1 million, and be-fore extraordinary losses of £30.3 million, down from £39.7 million. Sir Michael said manning levels fell by 14,000 in the period to the total of about 129,000, which com-total of about 125,000, which com-pared to a work force total of 197,600 in January, 1978. He said that BL'a recovery to its break even target date depended on further reducing costs in the truck and car groups, a weakening of the sterling exchange rate against the major European cur-rencies and investment in new rencies and investment in new products.

In a breakdown of the results, Sir Michael said BL Cars reduced its trading loss to £90 million from £124 million previously, while the Leyland Group truck, bus and tractor divisions showed a trading loss of £47 million, compared with a profit of £7 million a year earlier. He said Unipart and Land Rover are both making profits but at unacceptably low levels. He did

By Charles J. Elia AP-Dow Jones

NEW YORK --- To outsiders, the Organization of Petro-leum Exporting Countries appears in disarray, unable to agree on pricing as its members wallow in an oversupply of oil. Nigeria's sharp discount of $4 a barrel is further evidence of pressure on the producers, even with cutbacks in output. But OPEC members are not hurting as much as all this would suggest. And despite the ghut and the seeming inability of OPEC to unify oil prices, in-dustrial economies in Western Europe are staggering under what amounts to a large de facto increase in oil prices.

The kicker in the equation is the strength of the U.S. dollar and the accompanying decline in the values of foreign currencies.

The price of crude oil from OPEC - priced in dollars -averaged $32.90 a barrel in Deaveraged $32.90 a barrel in De-cember and, according to Pe-troleum Intelligence Weekly es-timates, the price in July, in the respective countries' weakened currencies, was $43.95 a barrel in Italy, $43.23 in France, $42.72 in Britain, $42.16 in West Germany and $37.83 in Japan. In barrel terms, OPEC's purchasing power overall was purchasing power overall was equal to $39.68 a barrel in July.

Morgan Gnaranty Trust economists calculate that oil prices in West European cur-rency terms have risen 35 to 50 percent since October, 1980. Even non-oil commodities, for which prices have dropped sharply in dollar terms, are costing Western Europeans 7 to 16 percent more than last October.

'3d Oil Price Shock'

"For the Enropean economies, this spinoff from dollar appreciation is imposing almost as large a cut in real in-comes as did the 1979-80 oil shock," Morgan Guaranty said, "and is being dubbed 'the third oil price shock."

U.S. Index of Economic Indicators Falls in July for 3d Straight Month

BUSINESS/FINANCE

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - A key U.S. economie barometer fell a slight 0.1 percent in July, the third monthly decline in a row, the gov-erament reported Friday. The deeline lent support to economists' predictions that the economy will continue to weaken in coming months.

The government's index of eco-nomic indicators fell 1.6 percent in May and 1 percent in June after rising for two consecutive months, the report said. But June's decline was revised upward in the new remonths of the year.

port, from 1.3 percent. July's decline in the index, which is designed to forecast trends in the economy, is in line with most analysts' predictions that there will be little or no eco-nomic growth in the July-Septemsources said Friday. They said Cabinet ministers will also review Japan's official eco-nomic outlook for the fiscal year ending next March at the meeting, which will probably be held in the second half of September.

But the sources emphasized that there is no urgent need for new measures because domestic prices have stabilized and business conditions have improved slightly since March, when the government in-troduced a stimulus plan. Behind the move is a growing feeling, especially in big business here, that another bout of trade friction between Japan and its trading partners is possible, with the powerful economy gaining mo-mentum on the back of exports.

The Japan Foreign Trade Council, organized by major trading houses, Thursday urged quick ac-tion to increase imports of industrial products to avoid possible trade friction with the United States and Western Europe. In the first seven months of cal-six weeks. Dealers say they are nnsure whether the buying is backed by government or private interests because the identity of clients is kept confidential.

Experts say tin production is concentrated in a fairly small number of countries, making it possible for producers to manipulate the market at times. Tin is also easier to stockpile than perishable com-modities such as coffee and cocoa.

Dealers say the aim of the buying could be to pave the way for a meeting in October of the Interna-tional Tin Council, which regulates the tin trade. Producer countries, such as Malaysia, are expected to renew calls at the meeting for an increase in the price range that the tin pact seeks to defend.

The pact seeks to keep prices within a range, agreed to by producer and consumer countries, through a buffer stock manager who can intervene on world markets.

Consumer countries, including the United States and the Soviet Union, blocked demands by the producers at a meeting last month for a higher tin price range. Prices are now very close to the upper level of the agreed range, where the buffer stock manager is obliged under the agreement to sell tin at his disposal in a bid to bring down prices.

reading of the book you keep asking yourself who the "false witness" can possibly be, as the list of candidates keeps growing and shifting. Judging hy this book, Dorothy Uh-nak has come far since writing the last book of hers that I read all the way through, "Law and Order," an ab-sorbing hut somewhat overwritten story about several generations of a New York City Irish police family. (In the interval, she published "The Ina little vague about the story. But her prose has gotten more spare. Her plot details count for more. So in far less space she achieves greater intensity than she has ever done before. Besides her clever plotting, what has enabled her to gain this intensity is the ethnic mix of her characters and the ethnic mix of her characters and the extremes of conflict among them. Not only is Sanderalee Dawson black, but she also has vague connections with the Palestine Liberation Organization. And her closest friend and confidant, the charismatic Regg Mor-ris, is so deeply involved in the politics of race that he may possibly be casting false suspicion on a Jew he can conveniently connect to the socalled Zionist conspiracy. Meanwhile, a Midwestern WASP on the district attorney's team can't believe that a Jew would be capable of committing such a violent crime. In the middle of it all is the novel's first-person narrator. Lynne Jacobi, assistant district attorney, bureau chief of the violent-sex-crimes division, who assures her doubting assistant that not only could a Jew do such a thing, but

As Dayan and his attorneys tell it, McDonald's underestimated the potential success of the Paris operations and licensed the franchises at only I percent of the gross sales, instead of the usual 5 to 10 percent. He said that because the Paris franchises were realizing annual sales of more than $30 million, or about $2 million each almost twice the company's average for foreign restaurants — McDonald's wanted to repossess them.

The company claims its good name is at stake. McDonald's has more than 1,000 international restaurants in 26 countries and tries to mold each of these foreign units in the exact image of its closely monitored domestic restaurants.

In 1972, McDonald's entered into an agreement with Dayan that allowed him exclusive rights to open 166 restaurants in the greater Paris area over a 30-year period. However, in 1977, company inspectors began examining Daym's restaurants, and reported that they were not meeting certain standards of quality, service and cleanliness. After making several offers to buy back Dayan's units, McDonald's notified him in April 1978 that he had been found in violation of the franchise agreement. Dayan won a temporary injunction that prevented the company from terminating the agreement, but it did not permit him to open additional units.

"What I did with the players association cost me all or parts of six seasons," Marshall says. have lagged even more than men's.

He also noted that India's sports achieve-ments bad been hampered by dietary realities. In this country, where half the population lives in poverty, the poor often do not receive enough calories to be able to work, let alone to run and jump.

Paunch as Symbol

Another limitation has been the disdain that some wealthier Indians have shown for any physical exertion. This is, after all, a country in which a slight paunch on a man is regarded as attractive, or at least signifies high status. Male models in advertisements here tend to be less lean than in the United States.

Talwar said that was changing, and he insisted that the middle classes were becoming passionate about sports and exercise. But he conceded that there still are few incentives to motivate excellence. "The government provides 2,000 scholarships of $12 a month to promising athletes," he said, but no other inducements are given to sportsmen by industry or government.

Raja Bhailendra Singh, the president of the Indian Olympics Association, says the Asian Games preparation now going on in 50 training camps may raise the level of interest in sport. But he lamented the lack of good coaching.

Influx of Coaches

Talwar echoed that view, noting that in addition to the acquisition of Nautilus weight-training machines and Astroturf from the United States, coaches were being invited from North Korea, the Soviet Union, East and West Germany and possibly other countries to prepare the Indian team.

The real payoff on the investment, Talwar said, will come after the games. Two-thirds of the expenditures, he said, are on permanent facilities that "will help train and develop athletes for generations.

NEW DELHI --- On the one hand, more than 125,000 men and women are energetically building $80 million worth of sports facilities for the two-week Asian Games to be held here 15 months from now. On the other, India, a nation of 684 million, has a dismal sports record, and its junior soccer team just lost in an international tournament to Brunei, a country of 213.000.

Contrast

The contrast between the construction of huge arenas, swimming pools, athlete villages and five-star hotels for the games and the abysmal performances of Indian athletes over the years is underlined in daily newspaper articles bearing such headlines: "Athletics Is Dying in India" and "Athletes Defeated by Their Diet."

As the cost of the arenas and pools here mounts, some critics of the government have questioned the allocation of precious development resources for a sports carnival -- particularly since the expenditure comes when India is seeking large loans and is forced again to import food.

But generally such reservations have been quashed, as government officials and politi-cians have linked India's obligations as host of the games to international prestige. Among the politicians is Rajiv Gandhi, the prime minis-ter's son and a rising light, who has said he cannot understand why India, with its great masses, has not been able to attain a better record in sports.

BRUSSELS --- Sebastian Coe of Britain regained the world record for the mile Friday night with a 3:47.33 clocking at an international track meet here.

Running in the "Golden Mile" at the fifth annual Ivo van Damme Memorial meet, Coe clipped 1.07 seconds off the mark of 3:48.40 set by compatriot Steve Ovett in Koblenz, West Germany Wednesday.

It was the third time in 10 days the record has been broken. Coe clocked 3:48.53 in Zurich Aug. 19 to break a previous mark of 3:48.80 that had been set by Ovett. The Associated Press LONDON - Britain's first and last newsreel cinema closed Thursday night with a Movietone news-reel from 1937.

The 250-seat Victoria Cartoon Cinema above platform 19 at Victoria station will be demolished to make way for a new rail terminal to Gatwick airport.

The 49-year-old cinema, owned by the Classic chain, was killed as a newsreel theater by the advent of television, but survived on car-toons, featurettes and serials. The audience of about 100 a day paying £1 (about $1.85) for a seat consisted mostly of people waiting for trains or trainps in search of a qui-

It is an exhibit of admirable clarity and simplicity --- too simple, says the popular zoologist David Attenborough: "You would go once," he said, "while in the older galleries you would go again and again."

The older galleries are indeed the epitome of a miseum of nat-ural history — a mixture of the miscellaneous and the bizarre. miscellaneous and the brank. Among the exhibits is Mack the Miller, an apparently distin-grished staffed greyhound who was presented to the museum in 1938. The newer galleries are 1938. The newer galleries are carefully pedagogic and include the museum's most popular exhi-bition ever: "Human Biology: An Exhibition of Ourselves," which has the glaring vivacity of a pinball perfor and which dis-placed a gallery of stuffed fish. hall, with hordes of children scampering under the long neck and fatally small head of a 26meter dinosaur, suggests that the muscum has its figures right. Refusing to be fettered by one style, Alfred Waterhouse added to his Romanesque central hall a fine Baroque staircase. He cov-ered every available surface with exhaberent Victorian decoration: carved monkeys climb a pillar in the central hall, while the east wing is devoted to sculptures of wing is devoted to schiptures of extinct species. Near the calling is a carving of a Seychelles gecko based on a bottled specimen from the museum's collection. Despite its public success, the museum is primarily a place of study. "Only 15 percent of our funding goes to the museum it-self, we are primarily a government research institution," says the staff member. With 300 scientists in five departments (zoology, entomology, paleontology, mineralogy and botany), it is an important center of taxonomic research, or the identification and classification of plants, animals and minerals.

In some fields there is no way staff members can keep up with the work. Take beetles, or Coleoptera, as William T. Stearn does in his book, "The Natural History Museum at South Ken-sington": Beetles are the most-numerous group of animals in the world numbering more than 300,000 species (there are more species of beetles than of flower-ing plants). The museum had about 170,000 species in 1976, which means that each beetle specialist has a curatorial respon-sibility for about 350,000 specimens and a taxonomic responsihility for about 19,000 species.

The collections are constantly miched. Past donors include Andrew Carnegie, who gave the model of a 24-meter dinosaur, model of a 24-meter innovation, Diplodocus Carnegli, that hailed from Wyoming, Charles Roth-schild who assembled the world's largest collection of fless, and the swashbuckling Richard Mein-ersthagen who gave his ornitho-logical collection of about 25,000 skins and 402 tongues of birds, as well as his trove of Mallophaga, or lice.

Nothing, it would seem, can halt the museum's growth: it even burgeoned amid the destruction of World War IL When the department of botany was struck by incendiary bombs, the firemen's hoses accidentally sprinkled some seeds of the silk tree Albizia julibrisia, which had been collected on the Macartney mission to China in 1793. Surprised by this sudden shower the seeds germinated after 147 PEOPLE: Deng Promises Support. In Wedding Squabble Mexicos's President Jose Lopez Portilio, in an unusual open letter to a newspaper, turned down the gift of a $2.4-million ranch after his retirement in 16 months. The Mexican president's letter came in answer to a column by journalist Miguel Angel Granados Chapa published in the UnoMasUno newspaper saying Gov. Jorge Jinsenez Canta of the State of Mexico was going to offer the president a 147-acre ranch in Tenancingo, 50 miles south of Mexico City, when he completed his six-year term Dec. 1, 1982. "The ostentation of a gift of this kind will contrast with the poverty
